Bright spots in Maine's forest products industry

New mills, investments and products help offset losses in some sectors

By JOE RANKIN

When Verso Paper Co. executives announced in October that the Bucksport paper mill would be closing Dec. 1, it sparked a familiar round: how to cope with the loss of tax revenue and the loss of jobs; analyses of the global paper market; the effect on workers and their families; the effect on the state's economy.

It was, indeed, deja vu all over again. The mill closure story has been repeated with numbing and disheartening regularity over the past couple of decades across Maine, the entire northeast and eastern Canada. From Winslow to Old Town, Livermore Falls to Millinocket, East Millinocket to Berlin, N.H. Cities, towns, small towns, it seemed to spare none.

It would be nice to think that it was all going to change, that paper is going to surge back in the state, bringing with it jobs and fringes and good times. But given the global changes in the marketplace and the country's anemic recovery from the 2008 financial meltdown, no one is betting that's going to happen.

But through the gloom there are a lot of bright spots. They usually don't get the headlines a mill closure does, and because they're scattered around the state they don't make as big a media splash. But they're there.

Here are some recent and fairly recent, highlights:

Expera Specialty Solutions, a Wisconsin-based manufacturer of specialty papers, announced in mid-November that it had sealed a deal to buy the Old Town Fuel and Fiber mill, which closed in August.

Catalyst Paper Corp. has announced that it wants to buy NewPage Paper's mill in Rumford for $74 million as part of a three-way deal that will clear the way for Verso Paper to buy NewPage.

Irving Paper Co. opened a new $35 million sawmill in Ashland, creating 60 jobs, a number expected to double within two years. The brand new mill can produce 100 million board feet of spruce and fir lumber a year.

Woodland Pulp LLC is spending $120 million to add two tissue machines at its Woodland pulp mill. The paper machines will be operated by an affiliate, St. Croix Tissue, and are expected to begin operating in 2015 and 2016. Tissue is one product that won't be supplanted by the internet.

ReEnergy has resumed operations at its biomass facility in Ashland, which produces enough electricity to supply 37,000 homes.

Louisiana Pacific invested more than $140 million in its New Limerick mill to allow production of laminated strand lumber.

EcoShel, a maker of cedar shingles, has opened a new mill in Ashland to produce its "Smart Shingle," creating about 80 jobs.

Maibac, a Canadian company, announced plans to buy Fraser Timber's lumber mill in Masardis. The mill employs 135 people and can produce more than 100 million board feet of softwood lumber annually.

Pleasant River Lumber Co. purchased the former Lavalley sawmill in Sanford two years ago and is investing millions in software and mechanical upgrades to the facility.

Pride Manufacturing in Burnham will be the new maker of the Lincoln Logs, the iconic kids' building toy, which had been made in China.

Corinth Wood Pellets plans to spend $7 million upgrading its pellet plant and will add 18 new jobs over the next two years.

"With new investments being made in technology and the development of state-of-the-art products, what we are witnessing is quite a remarkable transformation in Maine's forest products industry," said George Gervais, the commissioner of the Maine Department of Economic and Community Development. "This is a staple Maine industry and our goal is to provide the most stable and competitive environment to attract new private investment leading to more career opportunities for Maine people."

Patrick Strauch, the executive director of the Maine Forest Products Council, which represents most of the major players in the industry, said: "We don't want to oversell the opportunities because clearly there are many challenges ahead, but there is good news as well. Even during the difficult economic times, many in our industry invested to meet those challenges."

"...asking for ideas..."

To the Editor:

(I have) been selected to serve on the Energy, Utilities and Technology Committee in the 127th State Legislature.

The Committee is charged with the responsibility for energy policy, public utilities and technology. Every day in Maine and Piscataquis County we are impacted by rising costs for electricity, inadequate communication systems and limited access to broadband internet services. Our seniors struggle with the costs of heating their homes, our business community is challenged with escalating electrical costs and our families are facing increased expenses for electricity, heating and internet services.

We need to create jobs and a vibrant local economy to provide opportunities for our children and families. Reducing energy costs and expanding broadband internet access for new business development is a major priority.

I will be meeting with local business, municipal, and community leaders asking for ideas as we work in Augusta on these key issues. If you have suggestions contact me at Normehiggins@gmail.com

Do recent investments at Maine mills balance the loss of Verso Bucksport's 500 jobs? Well, it's a hard comparison.

"I think the question of whether the good news offsets the bad news is one of where things are happening," said Lloyd Irland, a forest economist and the president of The Irland Group, a consulting firm. "There's no offset for Bucksport," he added. The creation of jobs in Ashland isn't going to help Bucksport.

The jobs being created by new investments are sprinkled across the state, 100 here, 140 there; 10 here, 20 there. "These are really important to these local communities, but they don't move the needle on the state economy, which is what, 500,000 plus jobs," he said.

Many of them are in non-paper sectors of the forest products industry and "it's certainly true that making solid products out of wood doesn't support the wage and fringe levels that paper mills do," he said.

Still, the country is still struggling out of the worst economic downturn since the Great Depression. "Frankly we should be grateful everything that gets better, even a little bit of good news should be noticed and treasured," Irland said.

Asked to elaborate on one of the recent good news stories in the industry, Irland said he had to single out just one, but if he had to, it would be Irving's new $35 million sawmill in Nashville

Plantation that revved up in October.

"It's so encouraging for that area, that portion of Aroostook County, to have 60 jobs instead of zero, and the tax base to go along with it. It's basically a life raft cast to that community. And they really need it."

The impressive thing, said Irland, who toured the new facility, is that Irving elected to start over, not to retrofit the old Pinkham sawmill. "They bulldozed the whole thing flat and created a new mill. It's totally modern. Their wood pile is full. That couldn't have been done by anybody else because these people have their own land, their own forest. They're big into lumber, they have the marketing. All the pieces fit together for them."

In fact, if there's one theme to the good news, it's that it is that projects aren't being driven by the corporate giants, said Irland. He noted that Irving, a Canadian giant, is family owned, so is Maine.

"Look at the survivors and the successful spruce mills in the state. None are owned by the corporate sector. We are not looking at the big corporate logos, the big dinosaurs. It tells you something about who has survival capacity in this type of situation," Irland said.

Jason Brochu agrees. He's the co-president of Pleasant River Lumber Co., which has four ultra-modern mills in the state—three full-service sawmill-dry kiln-planer operations and a dry-kiln planer mill. The company bought the defunct Lavalley sawmill in the southern Maine town of Sanford and immediately began upgrading it. The company is now midway through a four-year $4 million upgrade at the Sanford pine mill that's directed at making it one of the most efficient in the state. And it probably won't stop there, said Brochu. "Any mill needs constant capital expenditures... to make a successful mill."

The Maine Forest Products Council said that six sawmill operators -- Irving Lumber Co., Stratton Lumber Co., Robbins Lumber Co., Hancock Lumber Co., Moose River Lumber Co. and Pleasant River--have invested an estimated $100 million over the last few years in new technology and equipment to improve efficiency and quality control.

Brochu estimates that sawmills in the state average more than $10 million a year in improvements.

Is that because of sheer confidence in the lumber industry?

"It's a confidence, but it's also a philosophy and a long-term approach," said Brochu. Sawmill ownership is in families or small groups, not big corporations, he said, echoing Irland. "There hasn't been investment ownership. Where you have seen some of that is where you've seen some non-successes."

Brochu is heartened by Catalyst Paper's interest in buying NewPage's Rumford mill and Experia Specialty Solutions' deal to buy Old Town. Both companies are focused on paper, he said, adding that a focus on the Pleasant River Lumber Co.'s Sanford pine mill product is what prefigures success in the forest products industry. "Hopefully we're drifting back to people who are interested in making paper, not energy and not doing financial engineering," he said.

Predicting the future in the forest products industry is a chancy business.

Irland somewhat ruefully notes that no one saw coming the tsunami of change that hit paper, lumber and wood products in the 1990s and into the new millennium—land selloffs by paper companies, takeover mania, consolidation in the sawmill industry, the near wholesale move of wood products manufacturing to China, the Internet's devastating effect on newspaper circulation.

"None of us supposed experts foresaw all this," Irland said. "If we had predicted, in every detail, what later occurred, in 1990 or even in 2000, we would have been written off as cranks."

And the change is ongoing. Irland said. "I'm groggy from so many bad news 2 by 4s hitting upside the head now that it's hard to visualize more. But there could be. The world is so uncertain now."

Still, Irland says it's a good sign that investment and interest is coming from people and companies with a passion for their product, not just the amount of money it can realize. "They're here because they want to be here," he said.

He thinks the future will rest more and more with entrepreneurs. Companies like Enviro-mats of New Portland, which uses low-grade lumber to make bolt-together erosion control mats; Cousineau Lumber Co. of Strong, which markets a dyed laminated lumber called Spectrally used in gunstocks, skateboards and other products; Kennebec Lumber Co. of Solon, which prefinishes engineered hardwood flooring as well as finished and unfinished traditional hardwood flooring; and Maine Heritage Timber of Millinocket, which markets a lumber sawn from wood salvaged from Quakish Lake.

"It will be entrepreneurial people who will spot opportunities, who will buy something that's dying and make it run against all the odds and against what the experts think," Irland said. "It's going to be an industry of families and individuals and small firms doing things where market making is more important. It's not going to be the kinds of things that giant corporations can do."

"And it's not going to be something we're going to be able to push by building industrial parks and giving out grants and trying to attract companies. There's no magic wand that state officials can wave" to make it happen, he added.

ASHES TO ASHES PET CREMATORY - The new LaGrange business offers end care for pet owners.

New local business offers end care for pets

By Bonnie Anderson

LAGRANGE - A newly built, locally owned and operated, state-of-the-art facility has opened in LaGrange that offers cremation services and products for beloved pets. A family business of lifelong pet owners, Ashes To Ashes Pet Crematory will provide compassionate end care with dignity and respect. Their services may be requested, when needed, either from your home or through your veterinarian's office.

Gene and Ardys Goodine, who have lived in LaGrange since 1985, decided to create a business that would allow them to work from home. After much research and many conversations, they selected the pet cremation industry. They felt that this business would allow them to provide needed options for others when they lose a beloved pet.

Opened on December 18th, 2014, the business is located at 340 Howland Road (Route 6) in LaGrange and you will recognize it when you see the big yellow sign.

Available products include a variety of urns but the specialty items they are most excited about are the remembrance jewelry. There are charms, necklaces and bracelets that are specially designed to hold a small amount of the remains which many find comforting.

Their website is www.ashesstoashespetcrematory.com. Directions and more details are available on the site.

Sharpening small tools DDATT event

DEXTER - Do you have dull small tools that need sharpening? On Saturday, January 17 the Dexter Dover Area Towns in Transition (DDATT) and the Abbott Memorial Library are co-sponsoring a "Sharpening Small Tools" event.

Participants are encouraged to bring their dull tools: scissors, chisels, knives, planes, etc. to learn how to sharpen them. Those familiar with sharpening techniques are encouraged to bring that knowledge to share with others.

A DDATT spokesperson emphasized that this is not a traditional workshop but a sharing event so "bring your dull tools and sharp minds in order to help others learn how to sharpen things!"

The event will be held at the Abbott Memorial Library's Meeting Room beginning at 10 a.m. For more information contact 277-4221, 924-3836, or info@ddatt.org. Snow date is Jan. 24.

Mental Health First Aid coming to Piscataquis County

DOVER-FOXCROFT - NAMI Maine, in collaboration with NAMI Piscataquis County, is hosting a Mental Health First Aid training on January 30 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Dover Foxcroft at the Charlotte White Center. With one in four Mainers facing some mental health condition in their lives, it is certain that most of us will have someone close to us whose life is significantly impacted by their mental health. Mental Health First Aid is an evidence-based, research-proven program designed to enable every day citizens to be able to help their neighbors and family members. If you have ever wondered how to ask a friend if they were depressed or to talk to a loved one about their substance use, this training is designed to give attendees the tools to do so.

This innovative training teaches participants to identify, and appropriately respond to, signs of mental illnesses and substance use disorders. The cost for this 8-hour training is $5, which includes a comprehensive training manual, lunch, customized resource guide, and ongoing support from NAMI Maine. Those who complete the course are then certified for 3-years by the National Council for Behavioral Health as a Mental Health First Aider. For more information about NAMI Maine's work to offer MHFA around the state, please visit www.namimaine.org or contact Christopher at (207) 622-5767 ext. 320. To register online to attend a Mental Health First Aid Training visit: http://www.namimaine.org/events/event_list.asp?DGPCrSrt&DGPCrPg=2

Mental Health First Aid is part of a national movement removing barriers to accessing mental health care by educating every day citizens about mental health conditions with facts and data. To learn more about MHFA visit the national website at: <http://www.mentalhealthfirstaid.org/cs/>

Center Theatre Christmas productions sparkle

DOVER-FOXCROFT - The Center Theatre kicked off their holiday season on December 12 with the premier of their Classic Family Christmas. The audiences in attendance got to see two different productions. The first is the Seussified Christmas Carol directed by David Murray followed after an intermission by an adaptation of the Velveteen Rabbit directed by Mathias Ringle. The Seussified Christmas Carol brings the classic Dickens tale to life with a distinctly Seussified twist. The 20 children in the show rhyme their way through this delightful production with more costume changes than you can count throughout the production the kids in the cast shine with their smiles, their songs and the laughs they gave the audience. The Seussified scenery goes through a remarkable transformation during intermission to set the stage for the Velveteen Rabbit.

This adaptation of the classic children's book by Margery Williams, written by Aaron Frodahl, introduces us to the story with a mix of live actors and puppets. But don't think of a weekend puppet show in a church basement, these are finely crafted creatures brought to life by talented puppeteers. Within moments you forget about the puppeteers and join in the magic and fun of the performance. It's a delight seeing these toys from childhood brought to life in much the same way as the Velveteen Rabbit becomes real by the end of the play. Adults and children will find something to love in this production.

The shows were sponsored by A.E. Robinson, Steinke and Caruso Dental Care, and McKusick Petroleum. More information on all the Theatre presentation can be found at www.centertheatre.org or by calling the Center Theatre at 564-8943. The Center Theatre is a non-profit performing arts venue dedicated to making the arts a part of life in the Maine Highlands.

Evergreen, help for grieving children and adults

DOVER-FOXCROFT - Starting in January, Evergreen, the Pine Tree Hospice Center for Grieving Children and Adults, will be meeting on the 2nd and 4th Wednesday of each month from 7 - 8 p.m. at the Dover-Foxcroft Congregational Church. For families who have experienced the loss of a loved one in 2014 or long before, the Evergreen Program provides a safe place for children, teens, and adults to work through their grief experience. Small peer groups provide an opportunity for individuals to share their feelings, remember the person who died, and give and receive support from others. Using art, play, or an activity, children are encouraged to discover what works best for them in their healing process. A supportive environment with others who have experienced similar losses can be extremely beneficial. Groups are led by trained volunteer facilitators. Training and programs are modeled after the nationally acclaimed Center for Grieving Children based in Portland, Maine.

Parents and guardians are welcome to join a support group which is held at the same time as the children's groups. Families must attend an orientation prior to attending Evergreen programs. To receive an Evergreen information packet or more information, call Pine Tree Hospice's office at 564-4346 or emailing wecare@pinetreeshospice.org. Evergreen programs are always free.
